- Parental Distress: The Initial Phase of Hearing Aid and Cochlear Implant Fitting

[\[Access article in HTML\]](#) [\[Access article in PDF\]](#)

Subjects:

- Hearing disorders in children -- United States -- Psychological aspects.
- Parents of deaf children -- United States -- Psychology.
- Cochlear implants -- United States.

Abstract:

The results of previous cross-section studies suggest that childhood hearing impairment may lead to parental psychosocial stress. The present study investigated whether modifications in parental psychic state can be ascertained in connection with the child's treatment events and the child's hearing and speech status, in a prospective study design. Data were available on 116 fathers and mothers regarding the pre-cochlear implant examination or hearing aid fitting of their child. In the course of the child's treatment, parental quality of life improved from a low to a normal level. Among children who were at the stage of pre-examination for a cochlear implant, better hearing and speech capacity was linked to more severe impairment of the parental state. It is emphasized that the parents whose children showed comparatively good language development at the time of pre-examination for a cochlear implant were especially subjected to stress.

Social Networks and Change in Contraceptive Use Over Time: Evidence From a Longitudinal Study in Rural Kenya [View in PDF]
Demography - Volume 39, Number 4, November 2002, pp. 713-738 - Article

Subjects:

Contraception -- Social aspects -- Kenya -- Longitudinal studies.
Social networks -- Kenya -- Longitudinal studies.
Social influence -- Longitudinal studies.

Abstract

The impacts of social networks on changes in contraception in rural Kenya are investigated using special data from a longitudinal household survey. An analytic model, informed by detailed knowledge of the setting, yielded estimates that indicate that (1) social networks have substantial effects even after unobserved factors (e.g., homophily) that may determine social networks are controlled; (2) controlling for these unobserved factors may substantially alter the estimated effects of networks (these controls were not used in previous studies); (3) network effects are important for both men and women; and (4) network effects are nonlinear and asymmetric, suggesting that networks provide information primarily through social learning, rather than by exerting social influence.

ABSTRACT

The World Wide Web has unleashed people's imagination and a plethora of new technologies have emerged. Since these technologies have sprung up to address different requirements, it has become imperative to understand how these different technologies fit together. This paper presents the state of the art of these different technologies and tries to present a coherent vision
